FIVE FOR ONE plan. THE WAY IT WORKS IS:

- The members of a club are divided into groups of approximately five members.
- Each team is asked to identify several prospective members who share the values of Rotary - remember it's not a numbers game, we want good people in Rotary who want to do good in the world and share the values of our founders.
- The team decides the best person or persons to make the initial contact with the prospective member. Many invite them for a coffee to introduce them to Rotary with one or two of the team attending, while others bring them to a club meeting as a guest. That decision is up to you and your club.
- After time spent getting to know the prospective member, normally two members of the team would invite them to become a Rotarian if they are suitable.

The Five for One plan works well because many Rotarians don't feel comfortable asking someone to join Rotary on their own, but if working with a group, they feel at ease. The aim is for each team to introduce one new member per year, which if achieved equals an increase of 20 per cent in membership.

There is always some attrition, but imagine if we had this system working everywhere, and we managed to have one new member, who shares our values, for every five existing members, join Rotary every year. How much more could Rotary achieve?
