Guest Speaker Senior Constable Doug Nyholm spoke on how he came to joined the NSW Police after leaving school worked with Ian Hunter, then decided to join the force. Doug's first posting was Hurstville for 3 years, then transfer to Albury 2001, Bombala where Doug did the training for the Emergency Service controller for the area, moved back to the Albury area, then transferred to Huskisson then was transferred to Ulladulla 2016. Doug informed members that he thought studying was over when he left school, though he has, in 25 years, done 150 courses, he is a mental health officer and Emergency Service controller just to name a few course Doug has done.

NSW Police is the largest Police force in the world. NSW Police force has a proud tradition of looking after themselves and recently have celebrated 100 years of Women in the Force. Enforcing the law and arresting people is just small part of their job, getting to know people is a major part of their job, and hard to believe that arresting people is the last resort. Strive for a positive policing training is a big part of how the Police deal with situations. People only ring when there is an emergency.

Police get satisfaction out of assisting the people in the community. Doug likes to touch base with members of the community. Growing up in the area Doug realise that the area isn't crime central and enjoys his work in the area.

Thank You Yvonne Young for the meeting's report.
